Building for Future Education

Three months ago, The Brunswick News graciously allowed me to write a guest column explaining Georgia's challenging financial situation and the potential budget cuts being faced by the College of Coastal Georgia. At that time, the state's public higher education system was being targeted for possible state funds reductions of 30 percent combined with the prospect of capped tuition.

Boys of Summer Summer Program Wraps up 17th Year

Before Jason Vaughn enrolled in the Minority Outreach Program at College of Coastal Georgia as a seventh grader, he never thought about pursuing a college degree.

He said his experience that summer literally changed his life and put him on track for success.

"It taught me a lot about how to be a student," said Vaughn, today a math teacher for the same program he went through years earlier. "It was the first time I ever saw an African American college student.

College's Economic Footprint Grows

College of Coastal Georgia's economic impact on Glynn County is continuing to grow.

Even when it was just a two-year institution, the college yielded an economic impact of $74.4 million during fiscal year 2008-2009.

College officials expect that number to be higher this time next year now that the college has four-year status.

"Certainly each step we add is going to mean the impact is greater," said Valerie Hepburn, president of College of Coastal Georgia. "(Nearly $75 million) is huge for this community."

Say Cheese! It's Picture Day

It's not too early to start thinking about what you will wear for your 2010-2011 staff photo. The Advancement Office will be taking new staff photos for all faculty and staff in August.

At Launch on August 11, a studio will be set up in the Conference Center for a quick photo opportunity. Plan on stopping in prior to Launch or set up a time with the Advancement Office later in the month.
